Therefore, option (d) is the correct answer. Higher education and research facilities were also built. This resulted in the establishment of the Board of Secondary Education in the Provinces, with the United Provinces being the first to do so. To focus on the issue of constructive policy in relation to the question presented, the internal university administration has improved. It examined the entire field, from elementary school to university education. Teaching and teaching work must be linked with research, which must be organized into different departments. Answer: The Government of India established the Calcutta University Commission in 1917, chaired by Mr. Michael Sadler, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Leeds. The commission included Indian members, namely Sir Ashutosh Mukherji and Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad. Answer: The main goal of this commission was to relieve universities of the burden of secondary education, allowing them to focus solely on higher education. (a) Hunter Education Commission, 1892-1893 (b) Indian Universities Act of 1904 (c) Sargent Education Plan (d) Sadler University Commission, 1917-19 Answer: (d) See the Explanation The Sadler University Commission (1917-19) recommended a twelve-year school course after passing the intermediate examination, rather than the Matriculation; students were to enter a university. Sadler Commission, also known as Calcutta University Commission was appointed in 1917 after its chairman Michael Sadler. Question: Who presided over the Calcutta University Commission in 1917? However, the commission's recommendations have been criticized for being too advanced for the time, and many of the new ideas proposed were not appropriate in the circumstances that existed at the time. (a) 1919 (b) 1917 (c) 1896 (d) 1921 Answer: (b) See the Explanation Sadler Commission, also known as Calcutta University Commission was appointed in 1917 after its chairman Michael Sadler. Soon after, more universities were established, including Delhi, Agra, and Annamalai (in Madras). Instead of scattered, affiliated colleges, a university should function as a centralized, unitary residential-teaching autonomous body. Question: Why was the Sadler Commission formed? Sadler, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Leeds, was appointed its chairman. Teaching had previously been the responsibility of degree colleges, and there was no provision for post-graduate education. The commission discussed the primary shortcomings of higher education in Bengal and made recommendations. The study of various Indian languages began. While the Hunter Commission had reported on problems of secondary education and the University Commission of 1902 mainly on the different aspects of university education, the Sadler Commission reviewed the entire field from school education to university education. With the introduction of Honours courses, academic activities in universities and colleges increased. However, the number of teaching and residential universities has increased recently. It was of the opinion that improving secondary education was a necessary precondition for improving university education. E. Impact From 1916 to 1921, seven new universities were established: Mysore, Patna, Benaras, Aligarh, Dacca, Lucknow, and Osmani. This was done to: prepare students for the university stage; relieve universities of a large number of below-university-standard students; and provide collegiate education to those who do not intend to attend university. Students should enter university after an intermediate stage (rather than matriculation) for a three-year degree program. A separate secondary and intermediate education board should be established to administer and control secondary and intermediate education. To improve university administration, the Syndicate and Senate must be replaced by the Court and Executive Council. As a result, it became known as the Sadler Commission. The Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras universities were responsible for providing affiliation, conducting examinations, and conferring degrees. University regulations should be less rigidly framed. Female education applied to scientific and technological education, and teacher training, including that for professional and vocational colleges, should all be prioritized. Dr. Michael. The Academic Council was established to oversee curriculum development, examination, and research. Question: When did the British government appoint the Sadler University Commission? More universities must be established, and older universities must be re-envisioned as residential and teaching institutions. Background In 1917 the Government of India appointed a Commission to study and report on the problems of Calcutta University. In this article, we will discuss the Sadler University Commission (1917-19) which will be helpful for UPSC exam preparation. Education departments were established at Calcutta and Dacca universities. To become the administrative head of the university, a full-time salaried vice-chancellor must be appointed. To relieve universities of the burden of secondary education, allowing them to focus solely on higher education Recommendations: The school course should last 12 years. Answer: In 1917, the government appointed the Sadler Commission to investigate the " conditions and prospects of the University of Calcutta," which culminated into a nationwide investigation. Further, it reported that the problems of high school training and organization were unresolved. Conclusion The recommendations of the Sadler Commission had a significant impact on the development of education over the next few decades. It is necessary to establish study boards, facilities boards, and statutory bodies. Therefore, option (b) is the correct answer. MCQs Question: Which of the following British acts/ plans/schemes/commissions recommended a twelve-year school course after passing the intermediate examination rather than the Matriculation? All universities must be free of all excessive official controls, and government meddling in academic matters must be stopped. In universities, the position of the professor was created. Although the Commission reported on the conditions of Calcutta University, its recommendations and remarks were more or less applicable to other Indian universities also.
